Mark Twain's Autobiography, Volume 2 With An Introduction by Albert Bigelow Paine – Volume I

This two-volume set, published in 1924, 14 years after Twain's death and so, "speaking from the grave", he felt he could be "as frank and free and unembarrassed as a love letter". The autobiographical chapters that he had published years earlier in the North American Review, were selected more for their acceptability and potential popularity than for their completely true reflection of his inner thoughts. In this book, the world was introduced to a much more frank and less restrained Twain. This partial Autobiography, consisting of about two-fifths of his known material, was compiled by his personal friend and literary executor Albert Bigelow Paine, who at the time had exclusive access to Twain's papers. - Summary by John Greenman and Wikipedia
